Case study: Building to zero: the financial opportunity behind decarbonization in real estate

Real estate, the world's largest asset class, is responsible for 30-40% of all greenhouse gas emissions (GHGs), more than any other industry on earth. Decarbonizing the Built World is an engineering and technology problem that will be solved by engineers and technologists who will require investment in science-based innovation to produce technologies that will help the industry meet mounting regulatory requirements to reduce emissions. This discussion will focus on the global real estate industry's culpability in the climate crisis and the multi-billion dollar investment opportunity that awaits for climate tech in the Built World.
