

Karan Mehandru is a General Partner at Trinity Ventures where he focuses on the Future of Work and makes early stage investments in SaaS, big data, cloud computing and mobile startups. Named by Forbes as a “triple unicorn investor,” Karan’s current investment portfolio includes Auth0, Cohesity and Outreach – each with a valuation of over $1 billion. He also led Trinity’s investments in Act-On Software, Jama Software, MileIQ (acquired by Microsoft), Preact (acquired by Spotify), RJMetrics, ScaleArc (acquired by Ignite Technologies), Simply Measured (acquired by Sprout Social) WayUp and Worklete, and works closely with Taulia.

Prior to joining Trinity in 2010, Karan worked at Scale Venture Partners, where he focused on growth-stage investments in enterprise software, SaaS, IT infrastructure, cloud computing and related areas. He spent almost a decade earlier in his career working in operating roles such as product development, marketing and sales for startups and billion-dollar tech firms.

Karan earned a Bachelor of Engineering degree from Carleton University in Ottawa, Canada and a Master of Management Science degree from Stanford University.

An accomplished athlete and citizen of three countries (Canada, India and the United States), Karan brings his competitive spirit and global outlook to all of his investments, as well as to his philanthropic pursuits. He is on the Board of Directors of Stanford University’s DAPER Fund and is a Charter Member of C100, a non-profit supporting Canada’s innovation economy.
