Key sessions include:

Capacity for climate consideration in investors' portfolios

- Beyond the energy transition, how are climate change considerations manifesting themselves in investors' portfolios?
- How is the industry doing when it comes to levels of sophistication and long-term thinking for a better climate future?
- Integrating climate risk into investment processes

Stretching the bandwidth? Assessing fibre opportunities and risks in an ultra-competitive market

- Overbuild and over-penetration - what can investors and fund managers do to ensure efficiency and successful returns in the fibre rollout race?
- Specialist versus generalist funds - weighing up the options when looking to incorporate fibre investments into your portfolio
- Impacts of the relative recent economic downturn on fibre investment opportunities and what lies in store ahead

Evaluating market access and fund structures for new and existing investors

- Index funds and the democratisation of private markets: what are we seeing in infrastructure so far? Have retail investors truly entered the market?
- Does the growth in open-ended structures and emergence of the Long Term Asset Fund (LTAF), amongst other examples, signal a changing of how infrastructure investment works?
- How are more 'traditional' institutional investors and fund managers responding to these changes in the market?
